PUBLIC LEDGER COMPANY CYRUS H. K. CURTIS, PRESIDENT. John Gribbel, Vice Freshlent; Geo. W. Ochs, Secretary; John C. Martin, Tressurer; Charles H. Ludington, Pallip S. Collins, John H. Williams, Directors.

EDITORIAL DOARD: Crave H. R. Craus, Chairman P. H. WHALEY Executes Editor OHN C. MARTIN. General Fusiness Menager Published daily at Pentre Labour Building, Independence Square, Philodelpaie.

NEWS BUILDAUS: HARRISTON DIRECTOR TO DESCRIPTION OF THE PART OF THE P

SUBSCRIPTION TERMS

By carrier, Dath. Oxiv. als cents. Its matt. postpaid cutside, of Pulmic plus, except where forcing pecage is remired, Dath. Oxiv. one meath, twenty-like matt. Dath. Oxiv. one year, three deliace. All mail subscriptions payable in advance. BELL, 3000 WALNUT KEYSTONI, MAIN 3000

Letter, followed with the following to t

APPLICATION MADE AT THE PHILADELICITY POSTOPPION FOR ENTRY AN ADDROPHY AND THAT MADE THE

PHILADELPHIA, FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 18, 1914

Mayor Lashes Gangsters

THE Mayor's message is a record of con-A structive achievement. It reveals him as the same old "War Herse of Reform," a man shot through and through with sincerity of purpose and determination, despite the cuptions opposition of Councils, to give this city good government. Of the many achievements of the administration during 1913, the most important by far was the reaching of na agreement for the abolition which means the certain and rapid completion of the Belt Line system and the resultant improvement of port facilities. It also presages a new cra of development in South Philadelphia. The sale of 4 per cent. bonds at par over the counter was a distinct triumph for the Mayor, as few financiers had any idea, in view of the money market, that the venture could be successful.

The Mayor very properly calls attention to the obstructionist policy pursued by Councils. It might be supposed that representatives of the people of this city would be anxious to serve it. Not so: there is another lash before which they cringe. They know as well as the Mayor does that the assessment of real estate is unjust and inequitable. The whole mass of the people will understand that situation and the reasons for it a little better later on. But the refusal of Councils to put the city's finances on a business basis is merely a temperary aberration. It has been demonstrated in the last few days that there is a power in the community greater than the coterie of bosses.

That the Mayor is inclined to be irritable at times is not remarkable. But he need have no fear of what the public thinks. It long ago analyzed the situation and intelligent men know that the administration has "made good."

Money and a Champion for Transit

MR. CONNELLY, chairman of the Finance Committee of Councils, speaks ing with areat cornesiness, told yesterday how anxious he was to further the plans for rapid transit and how glad he would be if the tritial appropriation could be made one or two millions of dollars instead of half a million. This is very interesting in view of the fact that the urgency of the appropriation was quite as obvious last week as this week, yet the committee over which Mr. Connelly presides was at that time quite convinced that no money whatever for transit could be found. It is a good thing sires and purposes are so susceptible of

The important fact is that a beginning of work is in sight. It would be too much to expect that the obstructionists are completely routed. Their pessimistic voices will be heard again. But the storm of popular protest which so quickly caused the Finance Committee to change its mind and converted the chairman of that hody, as it were, overnight is at once a warning and a threat to statesmen who imagine that the public will be meek in a matter of such vital importance as rapid transit.

Within Hearing of the School Bell

THIS is the month when school begins 1 The public statement that the "niggardliness and indefence" of farmers stand in the way of the centralization of rural schools is a reminder that the institution known as "the little red schoolhouse" has not yet been extinguished. It would be much fairer and much hearer correct to assign a different reason for its perpetuation.

The Anglo-Saxon love of local self-government bears some relation to this matter. Englishmen and Americans have always insisted on having their courts easily accessible, geographically and otherwise, Sim-Harly there is in the country places of America a strong desire that the school bell thail be within hearing distance, or almost. It is the Angle-Saxon disposition to feel most secure in the possession of democratic institutions when they are close at hand. The consolidation of rural schools is going rajeidly forward, but it is no essarily subject to Emitation by local pride local ambition and the sense of local integrity.

Other causes help retard the process of centralizing rural schools. It is navoral that fathers and mothers should wish to keep their children near home. Where the consolidated school draws its publis from a large area, many of the children must be away from home from early morning till late afternoon. It is a susuificant fact that one of the most common complaints of echool administrators and teachers is that the schools are nowadays forced to assume too many paren-

Expose the Last Pretense

WHAT virile Republican leadership exists in Washington is against Penroseism. Borah, Clapp, Cummins and men of their type make no secret of their opposition. They are close to national centiment, they sense the verdlet of 1916 if Penrosciam is indorsed by Pennsylvania.

The proposed Senatorial investigation of the primary campaign expenses of Mr. Penrose would be futile. The mercenary charagter of the Organization in this State and its willingness to squander funds to accomplish its purposes are well known. The nation does not need to be taught now the secrets of Penroseism. It understands them. There is but one pretense left to be exposed Mr. Penrose is capitalizing protection. He is using it as a mantle to cover up the real Penroselsm. He is posing as the one champion who can restore economic sanity in . It is not surprising that the cutting interestional affairs. The position constitutes the "pork" barrel should elicit loud squeak.

the only strength left in his candidacy, except that which comes from the Organization, and this, of itself, would be insufficient to bring him success. He has a chance of election so long as he can delude business men into believing that their business will be rained unless he is sent back to Washington. Once let them apprehend the fact that Penroseism is the paralysis which has seized on the Republican party and his whole political structure will crumble. A Penrose victory in November would be for the Republican party another march of Napoleon to Moscow.

Fished for a Minnow: Caught a Whale

The attempt to picture Doctor Brum-Organization would be more likely to suc ered had not the candidate demonstrated his independence and his abhorrence of a bit on degene of different occasions. He has not traveled in another man's harness at any time. He has, on the contrary, given repeated evidence of his ability to dominate any situation which arbses. Within the year he stood like a Gibraltar when the Organfaction attempted to felst its man on the schools of Philadelphia.

The truth is that in fishing for a respectable but easy candidate the politicians were cutmaneuvered. They landed a whale by mistake. It was not their fault. Before they knew it public opinion had centred on the schoolmaster, and there was no political association in Pennsylvania that could wrench the nomination from him. At Pittsburgh, Doctor Brumbangh swept the ready-made platform out of his way and announced that his pre-primary platform was his platform, that he was dedicated to it and would stick. He has stuck. He knows what he stands for and the public knows. of grade cros. Ings in South Philadelphia. Doctor Brumbaugh is used to giving orders, not to taking them. It will be a sad day for gangsters in Harrisburg if any of them attempt to tell this high-minded gentleman what he must do. The truth is that the people at last have a candidate of their own on the ticket: a man of fresh and blood, of character and determination. A vote for Brumbaugh is a vote against the Organization. and so his term in office will prove.

Do Not Trust Him

TAURENCE STERNE wrote "Tristram L Shandy." He also wrote some sermons. In one of them, the 27th, he said: TRUST THAT MAN IN NOTHING WHO HAS NOT A CONSCIENCE IN EVERYTHING.

A Victim History Will Celebrate

BELGIUM has been badly treated; there is no doubt of that. It was her misfortune to He between two giants who spent their nights and days making ready for battle. If there is any glory in war, any acknowledgment by posterity of the heroism of a people who consecrated themselves against fearful olds to the defense of their homes and firesides, the Belgians will find ample recompense in history for all that they have dared and suffered. But however great the sympathy of ordinary citizens in this nation may be for this vicarious sovereign victim. It is obviously not proper for the United States Government to inject itself into the situation. Final judgment will be rendered in the future, when the minds of men are not swayed by passion and prejudice. Yet the President very aptly expressed the feelings of his countrymen when he assured the Belgian Commissioners of the lasting sympathy of the United States.

Compensation Should Be Quick

FUR years ago a railroad brakeman in this city was injured in the discharge of his duties. He lost his right arm and his for the community that Mr. Connelly's de- right leg as a result. He sued for compensation and a jury gave him an award of $19,000, but the brakeman has not yet received a penny of this sum. Instead, he has been spending money for four years to get it, and will have to spend more now that the last Court in which the case was tried has thrown out his claim on a technicality.

Under a Workmen's Compensation Act this man's case-no isolated one in Pennsylvania -would probably have been settled inside of a month, and the claimant for compensation would have received his money the very same day the Commission finally adjudicated his case. He might not have received so large a sum as the jury awarded him, but he would have got adequate compensation promptly and at no expense.

New York, Ohlo and 21 other States in the Union have Workmen's Communication Acts in force. They have not always worked satisfactorily, but certainly some method of hastening final verdicts is necessary.

All the British soldiers are being vaccinated against typhold and smallpox before going to the front. It might also be a good. idea to shoot each of them with a small-calibred rifle in order to protect them from the | ing book "" guns of the enemy.

There was never any reason why the Army one." and Navy game should be played in any other place than Philadelphia. Constant blokering in the matter does neither institution nay good and it may seriously impair interest in the games.

The cheering news comes that Mr. Bryan has affected trenties with sufficient powers to insure peace with two-thirds of the world. In the same paper we read that those is-inch has effected treaties with sufficient Powers to ladging from the talk nmong the aliles na to the terms upon which they will permit Commany to sue for peace, it is evident that they have overlooked the dangers attending a pre-limitation enumeration of young poul

Those who have been contending all along that the inituence of the East is felt over the country will find confirmation of their views in the market reports that since the war bread is rising everywhere.

It is reported that the Bussian deneral Rennenkumpif wants to make a name for himself in this war. But the one he has would seem enough for ordinary circum-

Reports from Berlin are to the effect that the German authoric is still favorable. Nothing like being able to see the cloud's silver

Fritz Kreisler, the violinist, is on duty guarding a bridge in Vienna-a regular bridge, not a violin bridge,

The war tax revenue hill is loaded with dynamite. New taxes seldom pay politically. 54 is not surprising that the cutting into

PASSED BY THE CENSOR

DRINCE is dead. He had a home of which any gentleman would have been proud, but he was a dog of wandering habits. The wanderlust had him in its grip, and so he strayed from his fireside to the Bryn Mawr Polo Club grounds-for a couple of years, at least. He would happen along, like the dawn of a new day, and stay for a week or two. Then he would disappear. A fortnight later saw him at the club once more, and so after while he became a fixture and a favorite.

The other day he came again, after an unusually long absence. He wagged his tall in greeting, shivered as with the cold and gave up his canine ghost. They took his mertal remains to a little knoll near the Haverford avenue side and buried him.

And to the credit of some of the club members be it said that on the cheeks of at least two of them tears rolled down for an old friend-devoid of hate and sham and envy. and all the other frailties which make human beings human.

VOU have never heard of Newsum, for he I resides in Nashville, but he is a living example of the hustle and enterprise of the new South. Newsum-whose other name is unknown to fame-deals in automobile tires. When the war broke out and the cotton planters were unable to market their stable for ready cash, Newsum grasped opportunity by the forelock, swung himself buto the metaphorical saddle and rode to financial victory

How? By simply accepting warehouse receipts for cotton as an equivalent for cash. And as a result of his faith in human nature to placed $100,000 new business on his books in a few weeks. Now he is advertising for another $100,000 in the way of trade, and from indications he will get it.

All of which may be a hint to our local

FROM Ostend comes a letter detailing a reading, though utterly devoid of gore. An American and his wife were visiting the famed resort when the war broke out. Checks, letters of credit, even Belgian bank notes were refused in payment of debt. The American had just eight francs in gold, and hunger was staring him and his mate in the face-as well as the onrushing Germans. Down the beach they wandered, disconsolately. Soon they came face to face with the brightly lighted Kursual, where roulette and rouge et noir were in vogue. So they decided to risk their all in one desperate tussle with luck.

But the sign "Admission five francs" faced them. The wife dug deep down in her pocketbook and fished out a five-franc piece, placed there for eventualities. They went in and placed their eight francs on No. 28.

They received 35 to one for their money and lived on the gambled fortune until they could get out of the war zone.

THERE is every likelihood that Robert L Strawbridge, well known as a member of the Radnor Hunt Club and as a polo player of pre-eminence, will be re-elected master of hounds of the Hare and Hounds Club in England, although he has still part of his second year to serve in this capacity.

To be master of hounds of a British hunt club is an honor not understood in this country. Any American can be president. for the constitution says so, but fety Americans are called to be master of hounds. And yet Mr. Strawbridge accomplished this with a few years of transmigratory residence of the British Isles by gentlemanly courtesy, good-fellowship and, perchance, his American air of independence.

TIME was when Americans were not wel-1 come in England. Ralph D. Blumenfeld, or and owner of the London Daily Ev. press, born in this country, had that experience when he went to London to become editor of the London edition of the New York Herald. He fought the good fight and won, and now he is a power in British politics and

WHICH recalls that American idloms were not known in Britain, either, An American newspaperman wrote an item alleging that a certain Briton had a "swelled Within six hours the office was deluged with learned epistles, quoting Lindley Murray and all the other grammarians, to the effect that it should have been "swollen

Since then England has made satisfactory progress in the gentle art of using slang.

FIGHEY sat in a roof garden atop one of our I hotels, discussing and cussing the war and its effects on trade. The German waiter, Louis, brought the check for the luncheon.

"Louis," said one of the party, "you must have guthered enough gossip during your many years of waiting to write an interest-

"I know enuf to wride a book," responded Louis, "bud I know also too much to wride BRADFORD.

FRANCE'S CALL TO ARMS

Since the French troops entered Alsace and Lorraine, Paris has been rejoicing in the prespective return of the Lost Provinces. A picture, entitled "After Forty Years," and visualizing the reunion by showing an Al-sarian demoiselle dancing with a French soldier, has been scattered broadcast on post-cards. London Punch has observed the occas-

Guns of Verdun

Class of Verdun point to Metz From the plated parapets; Class of Metz grin back again O'er the fields of fair Lorraine.

Guns of Metz are long and gray Growling through a summer day Guns of Verdun, gray and long, Boem an echo of their song.

Guns of Metz to Verdun roar, Sisters, you shall foot the score"; Guns of Verdun say to Metz. "Fear not, for we pay our debts."

Guns of Metz they grumble, "When?" Guns of Verdun answer then. "Sisters, when to guard Lorraine Gunners lay you East again."

CURIOSITY SHOP

The well-known phrase. "Who struck Billy Patterson" is said to have originated 46 years ugo is a medical college in the Middle West. ego is a medical college in the Studdie West, it is related that a student, William Patterson, was blindfolded while being hazed, his head placed on a block and the block struck with an axe. When the hazers sought to false Patterson, they found that the shock had killed him. The students were placed under arrest and the question of "Who struck Billy Patterson" areas and has remained with us ever since.

Black, as an adjective applied to historic events, dates back many centuries. Black blonday was first applied to Monday, March 20, 1838, when the Irish fell upon the English at Culler's Wood, near Dublin, and massacred men, women and children. Easter Monday, April 14, 1830, was a Black Monday for Edward III and his army, encamped before Paris. Thou-Ill and his army, encamped before Paris. Thousands of his men died from cold and hunger. His son, Edward, Prince of Wales, was nicknamed the Black Prince, "by terror of his arms," according to Froissart, Black Saturday fell on August 4, 1621, on which day the Scottish Parliament admitted Episcopalian customs into the Presbyterian Church. During the passage of the act, a violent storm darkened the heavseemingly as a mark of Divine displeasure so the historians say, Mrs. Partington and her historic mop really existed. She lived at Sidmouth, Devoushire, England. In November, 1834, a heavy gale drove the sea waves into her house and she labored with a mop to wash them back into the occan until she was driven into the upper story by the water.

IN A SPIRIT OF HUMOR

Poetry

We had decided to write a serial poem on autumn—its etherial beauty—its delights—its —anyway, we had decided. Just then a com-—anyway, we had decided. Just then a committee of long suffering and patient hoj pollod waited upon us—they did not wait over long (comma) however. They convinced us against our will, but convinced us, nevertheless, that poems on autumn, even as on spring, are detrop, causing ennul, are conducive to migraine and not a bit genuethilch. So we decided to stow away our rhyming dictionary for use when balmy garlle no longer scents the evening air and the little birds no longer chirp sweet nothings, and then—birgsh—thirp sweet nothings. sweet nothings, and then-b'gosh we'll write a poem on BEAUTIFUL SNOW!

An Arabian Nightmare

King Solomon, for it was none other, faced them boldly. Even as the sands of the sea, or the chorus of a comic opera, they advanced. Throwing their collective arms about the King's neck, they chanted in chorus, sopranos, mezzos, altos and the voice-

"We need some clothes to go down to the shore, and the leebox is leaking and the rent is due."

And Solomon, when in his generation—for only a sage could explain a late home-coming to a thousand wives at once—went to the nearest street corner, and rubbing the magic lamp, summoned the genil.
"Get me an aeroplane," he demanded.
"But, your kingship, they haven't been invented as yet," explained the genil, "but I've got something just as goed." And he produced the magic current.

duced the magic carpet.

And Solomon, gripping his whiskers firmly, was whizzed away to Reno, where he instituted 1000—count 'em—1000 synchronized divorce suits and lived happily ever after.

Specifications Requested

The Boston Globe asks whether a man can really love his neighbor as himself. Do you mean the blonde next door, dear Globe, or the auburn-tinted Venus across the way?

The Other Way About

First Stenographer-"Out of job, are you? Did the boss catch you flirting?"
Second Ditto-"No, I caught the boss that You must come to our wedding, dear.'

But George Fred Resigned

One fancies that Turkish Ambassador Rus-tam Bey is the George Fred Williams of his country.—Chicago News.

Bill's Watch Bili Bowhay is a jolly wight,

He loves his little joke;
Says he: "My watch is water-tight,
It's often been in soak."

—Cincinnati Enquirer.

If Billy were a German now He'd show up good and fine, His timepiece would most surely be A "Watch upon the Rhine."

-Memphis Commercial Appeal.

In Extremis "Excuse me," sir," said the strap-hanger, "but would you mind moving your portmanteau from the gangway? I really can hardly find room to stand.'

"Move my portmaneau," gasped the stranger: "those, sir, are my feet!" "Is that so?" said Jenkins, "then perhaps you would plie them one above the other?"-

All Right, Have It Your Own Way Young hubby has an awful ache.

With pain his tummy's rent; His wife baked bread, and by mistake For flour she used cement -Wapakoneta, O., News.

Fully Recovered Evidently

"She was completely prostrated and made very ill by his perfidy." "Did she recover?" "Did she recover?" "Yes, $5000."—Boston Transcript.

What Lacked Buttons An English colonel at kit inspection said to Private Flanigan:

"Hh! Yes, shirts, socks, flannels, all very good. Now can you assure me that all the articles of your kit have buttons on them?" 'No. gir," said Private Flanigan, hegitat-

"Aren't no buttons on the towels, sir."-Kansas City Star.

Dangers of a Great City

REV. ALLEN VISITS BUFFALO AND FALLS

-Headline in Dunkirk, N. Y. exchange.

Slander Refuted

Recent events cast a shade of doubt on Mr. Kipling's remark as to the comparative deadliness of the male and the female of the species.-Chicago Herald. Exclusive!

Somewhere the following verse was published—somewhere a poet's heart will bleed because no credit can be given—we have forgotten from which paper we ellipsed this: If liars cannot go on high,

I'll be real lonesome when I die; It will be tiresome up there, gee! With no one but T. R. and Me.

Argument Closed

Jackson and Johnson are not now on speaking terms. It all arose as the result of an argu-ment which required some mental calculation. "I tell you," said Jackson. "that you are altogether wrong in your conclusions," "Pardon me, but I am not," replied Johnson "Didn't I go to school, stupids" almost reared his opponent "Yes," was the culm reply, "and you came back stupid."—T.t-litts.

THE ROAD

This is to you like any other road. A byway old and gray, that naught redeems Past common hedgegrows slipping, on its way Across dult meadowlands, o'er winding atreams.

But hear what this read is to me, my friend, Lout in the blue of distances, afar, It is a way of dreams, that does not end. This side the furthest star. The meadow bridge, the distant steeple tail,

The wooded slote, where shifting shadows I Like loyal friends, across the years still call, To whisper memories of the days gone by. What garnered glories have the sunsets flung n the canvas of the mist-draped West!

What treasured incense twilight's censer awang Across the fields of rest! Oh, tell me, where, in all the wide, wide world, Acolus tunes his harp to softer song Than threads these trees, when darkness is

And all is hushed the shadowy hills among? Oh, friend! to me, this old, forsaken road, With all its wisiful windings a'er the sad, Is just a misty ladder to the stars— A way of attil, white dreams, that leads to

-Essie Phelps Duffy, in the Touth's Compan-

DONE IN PHILADELPHIA

WHEN some of us read a few weeks ago of an archery tournament at the Merion Cricket Club, at Haverford, we looked upon it as a revival of a sport which we had connected with Robin Hood's days. Probably few Philadelphians were aware that this city took a prominent part in archery, 50 years ago, and that so much of the pastime as has gained a foothold in this country is directly traceable to the efforts made here at that time.

I believe it would be safe to say that not a dozen Philadelphians ever have heard of the United Bowmen of Philadelphia; or, if they have, have promptly forgotten it.

I confess that the story of the United Bowmen would never have been known to me had it not been my fortune to stray upon a little volume entitled "Archer's Manual," which was published in 1830, during one of my visits to an old book store. It is an interesting little brochure and I valued it also because of its frontispice showing the Bowmen on the butts, in the quaint costume which had been designed for them by Titlan Peale, an artist who was the founder of the organization, the plate had been drawn by Thomas Sully, the portrait painter, who also became one of the

Whenever you want to know something of the history of the city, as every good Philadelphian should, you hasten to consult the pages of Scharff & Westcott's History, and Watson's Annals. Being a Philadelphian and having this habit fully developed I did the same when I desired to look up the United Bowmen. But I did not find anything in either of these works.

Yet I was curious and continued my search and was rewarded by uncovering a little history of this ancient society of archers. This pamphlet was penned by the survivor of the little band of bowmen, R. B. Davidson, who died in 1888, at the age of 80 years, and who realizing that he held the key to the mystery, told the story of the rise of the association. It was a rather ambitious name with which to start an organization of half a dozen enthusbasts. It also seemed equally ambitious for them to adopt a costume for the purpose, but they did. And it all came to pass just because Titian Peale felt a tightening of the chest after his return from the Rocky Mountains on Long's expedition, and felt the need of exercise before breakfast. Titian Peale was the fourth son of the first great American portrait painter, Charles Willson Peale, and although himself a draughtsman and a naturalist, he was not generally regarded as a painter, yet, of course, he could Peale accompanied Long's expedition in the early part of the last century to explore the Rocky Mountains in our then recently taken over Louisiana territory. He died in 1885 at the age of 85 years, but some years before his death he gave the history of the formation of the Bowmen to Mr. Davidson.

I need not quote him further than to give his explanation of the genesis of the archers here, and the introduction of archery into this country.

"In 1825," he wrote, "after returning from Long's expedition to the Rocky Mountains and feeling the want of outdoor exercise and disliking billiards, tenpins, etc., a few friends joined in choosing archery before breakfast and a walk in the country." The friends who became the first members and founders of the United Bowmen were Franklin Peale, Titian R. Peale, Dr. Robert E. Griffith, Samuel P. Griffith, Jr., Jacob G. Morris and Thomas Sully. It appears that Sully, who at that time was almost at his height as a painter, did not take a very active part. He did take the walks in the country, for the country was much nearer the of the city than it is today

This will be better understood when I tell you that the Bowmen held their first tournaments, if they may be so-called, at Bush Hill, where they set up their butts. Bush Hill was close to the city hospital, and the archers may be said to have congregated for their sport in the neighborhood of 20th street and Pairmount avenue. There is not much to suggest open country in that neighborhood now. But this was in 1828, when Peale had his Bowmen organized.

I should mention that they did not hold tournaments under that name, but had their field days." The costume, as can be seen by Sully's picture of the field day uniform, was rather prepossessing, but looked a great deal like a boy's suit of the period that had reached full growth.

This uniform consisted of a light sporting can of black bombazine, an iron gray jacket bound with black braid, and white pantaloons. Thus were the United Bowmen attired on field days and prize days, as they called the days when the archers shot for prizes.

You can imagine that this was a rather exclusive circle. Only friends of the founders were likely to apply for admission, and while the number was gradually increased, at no time did it centain more than 25 members. In 1836 they changed their uniform again. This time they abandoned all suggestion of boyhood in the design. The new costume consisted of a single-breasted frack coat with standing collar of drapd'etc, Lincoln green in color, evidently in honor of the great archer, Robin Hood, and this coat was trimmed with gold lace, so you see they must have made a very pretty picture when they were all out on a field day at Bush Hill. An arrow worked in gold adorned the collar of the coat, and a straw hat covered with green cloth, turned up saucity at one side "with three ostrich feathers couchant" formed a fitting capital to a noble disure. The remainder of the contume included white pantafoons, guard and belt of black leather and a gold buckle.

The rapid extension of the city caused the club to change its grounds every few years. They at one time rented a farm at Fountain Green, at another they had grounds at Nicetown, and finally at Carnac's woods. Dr. William Camac was the last member admitted, and he was elected in 1855. About the time of the Civil War the Bowmen virtually ceased to exist, but their example encouraged archery in this country, and it has been carried on here and there until the present day, although we have heard little about it.

But this is not the only sport that Philadelphin was the first to foster. That sounds like a promise, and perhaps it is.

GRANVILLE

A New Internationalism From the Boston Hurald.

From the Boston Harald.

The most overrated virtue in the world is patriotism. It can be developed to excess. There is a higher lovality than to the other people of one's own land, and that is loyalty to all mankind. We one something, in peace and in war, to the spirit of a broad humanity, or to those forces and influences which make for a better understanding of the other fellow, and a clearer perception of his rights and feelings and interests. ings and interests.

Narrowhese of national feeling is the cause absent in the South for several weeks, I am interested in the progress of affairs at home. I note with some disgust and more indignation the insincere and hypocritical position of the political leaders and newspapers supporting the policy of "County Option." County option in Pennsylvania would take from every city, borough and township out-from every city, borough and township outside Philadelphia, which is a county by itself, the right to decide by will of the majority the policy to be pursued in regulating liquor Becauses. In countries where the rural population exceeds the urban, it would take from the centre and give to the outlying sections the control. If in Pennsylvania the Prohibitionists could secure 51 per cent, of the vote in favor of State prohibition, they would deny to the other 49 per cent, the right of home rule. After pointing out the demoralization which attempted prohibition would work in Philadelphia, a writer says that there is less drunkdephia, a writer says that there is less drunk-enness in New Orleans, with a liquor license to every 250 people, than in Philadelphia, where there is one to every 750, and that in five weeks he has not seen a score of drunken men in the Southern city. As for Portland, Me., where pre-fundamental of all wars. No officeholder of aspirant for public favor wants the task of telling his countrymen that they are wrong and that the foreigner is right. It is an unpopular assignment. The few men who bravely assume assignment is the desired by the de favor engendered in taking the other nations cause, like that of Spain in 1883 or Mexico in 1846, that nobody is likely to do it unless very strongly convinced that duty leaves him no other alternative.

ON TIMELY TOPICS

Contributions That Reflect Public Opinion on Subjects Important to City,

VIEWS OF READERS

To the Editor of the Evening Ledger:

State and Nation.

hibition prevails, it is notorious for drunken My experience teachemme that the advocates. of local option and prohibition are sadly mis-taken, and yet I recobhize and would, if possi-ble, eradicate the excesses and evils associated with the reckless sale and use of alcoh uors. GEORGE MULLER. New Orleans, September 10, 1914,

ANTITYPHOID VACCINE

To the Editor of the Evening Ledger: Sir-The experience of the American army in the practically total abolition of typhoid fever among our soldiers by the use of the antityphoid vaccine finds a striking confirmation in the British army in India. In the British Medical Journal of August 22 is an official appeal by the British War Office for the use of this protective vaccination, in which it is stated that though its use is only voluntary, "at least 93 per cent, of the British garrison of India has been protected by inoculation, and typhold fever, which used to cost us from 300 to 600 deaths annually, was last year responsible for less than 20 deaths," Philadelphia, September 15, 1914.

FROM THE BANKERS VIEWPOINT

To the Editor of the Evening Ledger: Sir-We wish to congratulate the publishers of the Purac Ludger on the new evening edltion. An evening paper of the Public Lapons quality is a great addition to Philadelphia's news service. We presume that when the exchanges are again open we shall see a financial page in keep-ing with the same department of the morning edition. This will make a great hit with the bankers, brokers and their clients. This city has never had a full and accurate report of bond and stock transaction (particularly the former) in an evening newspaper.

With best wishes for the success of your newest enterprise, we are, USSING, SCOVILLE & CO. Philadelphia, September 16, 1914.

WELCOMES EVENING LEDGER

To the Editor of the Evening Ledger: Sir-If the spirit of the little article from the Evening Bulletin entitled "A New Evening Contemporary," and reprinted in the first edition of the Evening Ledger, September 14, is to be taken in good faith, then we should feel that at least more than one great evening newspaper can go in Philadelphia, especially when such a urnal as the Bulletin welcomes as it does the Evening Ledger.

I also beg to tender my humble congratula-tions and good wishes for your success.
ADAM GEIBEL
Philadelphia, September 16, 1914.

COMMENDS OPPOSITION TO PENROSE To the Editor of the Evening Ledger: Sir,-I desire to commend your course in opposing the nomination of Senator Penrosa the country is running very strong against Mr. Penrose, and a paper like yours can bels it out, and if the sentiment grows there as it is here, it certainly would result in his defeat. ROBERT RITCHIE.

Benver, Pa., Sept. 15, 1914.

for re-election. The sentiment in this part of

FROM A POLICE CAPTAIN To the Editor of the Evening Ledger: Sir-You have my best wishes for success. I have greatly enjoyed the first issues of the Eve-ning Ledger. WM. J. McFADDEN. ning Ledger. WM. J. McFADDER. (Capt. Fifth Division Police Department).

September 16, 1914. THE FINANCIAL DEPARTMENT

To the Editor of the Evening Ledger: Sir-Permit me to compliment you upon the excellent showing made by your meancial separiment. I notice several articles in tomph's Evening Ledger which do not appear in other evening newspapers. If you expect to gain the confidence of the brokers, it is necessary to not only print more news than is the custom, bave the papers on sale with market closings in time for bankers and brokers when they leave their offices. Thus far, I may say the work has been excellent.
PHILADELPHIA BROKES.

Devon, September 16, 1914.

THANKS FROM NEW JERSEY To the Editor of the Evening Ludger:

Sir-Thank goodness, Camdon is represented at test! Philadelphia newspapers treat our city about the same as the New York newspapers treat Brooklyn. I see that the news is printed in the Evening Ledger, and I can assure you that the people of New Jersey will read you paper if you continue to let us know who appening over here during the hours it work in Philadelphia. J. H Camden, N. J., August 16, 1914.

NATIONAL POINT OF VIEW

There is no assurance as yet that the miss owners in Colorado will meet the President and the labor leaders half-way. Thus for have shown no willingness to concede anythin the interest of peace. When they see may feel differently.-New York World. What is the prime and fundamental fact this plan (for a truce in Colorado)? It is that a gentlemad's agreement shall be substituted for the protection of the State to which both men and owners are entitled, and that it shall be unforced by the personal skill and power of the President of the United States, operating through an extra-legal device, and knowns that government of laws and not was so dear to our uncestors.-New York Sun-

The Western Powers, including the United States, are not all likely to admit Turkey's right to repudiate her treaty engagements. The performance of the Turkish Government bears all the earmarks of an international indecency, if the Turks persist they must expect a day of reckoning. It may not be convenient to insist upon it at once, but in time it will be made.—Chicago Herald. time it will be made.-Chicago Herald The New Hampshire Bull Moose inderse-ment of Senator Gallinger merely proved how meaningless is the official designation of Colonel Roosevelt's party. The adjective "progressive" applied to Mr. Gallinger is his "progressive" applied to Mr. Gallinger is his short of ridiculous.-Cleveland Piain It is perfectly proper that Great Britali should try to capture Germany's foreign trade white the manufacture of goods is in terrupied and the ways of sea-borne com-merce are blocked by war, but it is question able if the British appropriation of opatents is entirely consistent with fair

ing in the war of trade.-Boston Herald